out his position on financial questions by forcing officeholders into line for the by forcing officehelders into line for the administration policy. It is a grand offort to force on the people of the country the policy of the president, which as is well known, is the policy of Wall street and the men who put up the money for his last nomination, and who slince his election have been using executive secrets in stock gambling, thus making millions of dollars by reason of the White House pull.

money for his last nomination, and who since his election have been using executive secrets in stock gambling, thus making millions of dollars by reason of the White House pull.

Down in Virginia a few days ago Cieveland appointed ex-Governor Fitzhugh Lee collector of an internal revenue district. In the contest for the place the two senators from Virginia and the members of the house from the district united on another man for the office, and they supposed that he would be appointed. But they were all turned down and Lee was named for the place. It seems that the man agreed upon by the senators and representatives had some ideas of his own about the financial issue and was known as a sliver man. In addition to this the two senators from the state and all the members interested in the appointment are sliver men, and hence the president disregarded their wishes and appointed the ex-governor. No one seriously supposed for a moment that Lee would be appointed, for he is unnit for the place. But the prestige of the name of Lee was utilized by Cleveland to make a winning in that state, besides Lee can be molded into one of the finest goldbug cuckoes in the country.

This is only a sample of the way the president is turning the heels of the Democrats in congress skyward by reason of the financial issue. An interesting feature of the situation is found in the pressure being brought against the officeholders. There is very little pie to be given out at present, most of it having been issued in bringing about the regard of the Sherman law and other bunco administration schemes, but what is left will be used in buying up favorable public sentiment for the administration, it is apparent that the president proposes to make it very unpleasant for those in office who are reported to be against the administration's financial policy.

A case is in point in Wisconsin. A United States attorney in that state had

The attorney in that state had an opinion on attorney in that state had an opinion on a thorney proceeded to talk in the fashion of a freeborn etizen and at once got into trouble with the department. His accounts were all wrong and he could do nothing in a way to meet the approval of the department handling his accounts. Senator Vilas at last gave him a tip. He intimated to him that if he would make out his accounts as formerly and take no part in the financial discussion he might set along much better. The official thought that this was rideculous, he could not understant this was rideculous. He could not understant this was rideculous, he could not understant this was rideculous, he could not understant the burgarity and harries, him in his official duttes because he was doing something which, in his judgment, was for the best interests of the country and for his party. He could not understand it, and therefore came to Washington to look after the matter. He circulated around the departments, and even the man who opened the door leading late the hurau in charge of his accounts appeared to understand that he was an official to be published for his selver views, and the messenger was no certain time, but he was an official to be published for his selver views, and the messenger was no certain time the country and the departments, and even the man of the bureau set they may be presented the bureau of the breached the hurau his charge of his accounts appeared to understand that he was an official to be published for his selver views, and the messenger was no certain time. administration. But it appears that the general has been reported to the president as not wildly in favor of the administration's financial plan. Soon after this the general was called to Washington on business. Of course something was wrong with his accounts. Then he had a talk with the president. There was much desire to learn what transpired, but the general did not care to see the members of the press. It is said that the dose administered by the president to General Black had some effect, but what it will be remains to develop. It is supposed, however, that the general will be very busy during all this agitation in Illinois leading up to the convention of June 4.

ment. Then everything was greased. The messenger at the door threw the door wide open by the time he was within twenty feet of the door. The chief of the bureau was all smiles and acted just like he had been a school-mate of the attorney from Wisconsin. There was no trouble with the business at all. That very day everything was adjusted and the department clerks loved the official from Wisconsin. It will probably be pronounced very little business for the president to black-list officials of the government in this fashion. To annoy and persocute them and force them into supporting the administration may be just a little rank, but this is the game of the day. The president is not a reading man or anything else; he looks after hen interests. The blacklist is being made out all over the country. Any official who is reported as not supporting the administration is to be spotted. If an official cannot be managed in this way he is to be disgraced by departmental technicalities and removed from office. This is the plan decided upon and it is being carried out.

General John C. Black, United States attorney for the Northern district of Illionis, is in very hot water.
